

March 1991

To the Class of 1991:

Pratt Institute is a profoundly urban institution, one committed — by design — to New York City, one for which the forces and factors that shape the urban post-industrial world have had a more determinative effect on what we do and teach. All of our educational programs have a common thread which I will call "design" — whether one is an architect, urban planner, communication, fashion, interior or industrial designer, a fine artist, a transformer of socialist Europe, an end to the Cold War, and the specter of a prolonged foreign conflict. When you mix these world events with what is happening in the economy and what is happening in your own evolving education, you have a foretaste of your life to come. A fully engaged professional — whether an artist, a designer, an architect, or an engineer — builds a creative career out of the possibilities in the world, interacting with her or his own talent.

While this is your last year at Pratt, it has been my first here. I am very positively impressed with the quality of faculty and the academic program and the ability and imagination of our students. I personally hope that Pratt has been a strong force in strengthening and disciplining your talent. More than most graduates, you have a better sense of what you would like to have as your life's work. To achieve "good work" is what all should seek and you are closer than most to that end.

I hope you will remain in touch with Pratt, presently exists in the liberal arts and hastens the day when students begin to take themselves seriously. Second, at places like Pratt where students literally make their reality as part of their education, one sees in studios and laboratories and the projects that arise from both an exercise in fruitful apprenticeship and the acquiring of a growing sense of competency, in contrast to the conventional liberal arts experience where one only reads of other's acts or thoughts and the only imaginative reconstruction a student usually undertakes is the writing of a term paper. Indeed, we should not be surprised that the careers often prized of those educated in the conventional liberal arts are those careers associated with power, rather than the life-affirming careers of those for whom design is the centerpiece. Thus, we dedicate Pratt Institute to providing the education that will assist those professions that are key to the recovery of the world's economy, to those professionals who will through design work on the habitability of our cities and making more just the allocation of opportunity, and to provide a creative antidote as an institution to what at present ails the liberal arts — the fruitful synthesis of ethics, knowing oneself and one's society better, and praxis.

Sincerely yours,
Warren H. Hussian
President

BENEDICTION

The Reverend Michael Perry Senior Chaplain, Pratt Institute

Harren Frederick Ilchman may your tenure

as 10th president of Pratt Institute be blessed by all the powers that be and by God who is found about the names of God.

May your life reflect the serenity of the Buddha, and the wisdom of Solomon, the Mother and Sister of Moses who hid him in the reeds, the zeal of Mohammed, and a heart filled with song like David the King.

May you have the hospitable heart of Martha, the contemplative soul of her sister Mary, and the patience of Job, and the staying power of Christ's Mother and John.

May your sacrifices be rewarded like those of Abraham and Sarah, and may you have all the hands of Shiva to help you in your work.

May Atlas help you to shoulder your burden, and Nataraj teach you to juggle and dance,

Special thanks to Dr. Ilchman and may you always have a Daniel to help you read the handwriting on the wall.

May Gandhi teach you perseverance, and Martin Luther King teach you justice, and may you have the business sense of our founder, Charles Pratt.

Be blessed, Mr. President, with the strength of the wind, and the warmth of the sun, and be as noble a man as God made you to be.

Amen.
